The project manager's guide to Manifest Done-ness

Shelving indefinitely is a symptom of failed processes; fix them

Build boldly and iterate gladly

A good prototype can and should become the finished product

Specify just in time

Expect to nag and be nagged

Turn anticipating the next feature into a motivation for completing the current one

A bug on a closed feature is itself a new feature

Always plan for and have a vision for the next phase

Everyone commits to keeping features moving towards completion

Terminate bad features with a glad heart

Be ruthless about what the project doesn't need

Celebrate every "done" equally

Pushing the project forward, feature by feature, is everything
